Once you have selected the options, you can click the "OK" button to start the operation or just click the "Cancel" button to leave the current settings unchanged. Earlier this year, the FBI began an internal-only trial of Emsisoft Anti-Malware, despite the fact that the product has been on the market for more than two years. It's been almost a month now that the government has put this program to the test, and today we get an update on the FBI's experience. The Emsisoft trial is the result of the FBI's involvement in the Operation Tovar (Anti-Terrorist Task Force, as it's now called) and the Emsisoft Anti-Malware product has been pre-installed on the FBI's own laptops. A total of eight laptops have been used in the trial, with half of them going public on the Internet so everyone can see exactly what the FBI gets up to. While the trial has been a rather easy affair so far, it won't be long before the FBI starts finding out about the challenges they may face. The five publicly released FBI computers have a total of 1.8 million pages to scan and 500 gigabytes of data to analyze, which amounts to a lot of work for the FBI. The notion of a "clean" laptop means that there are no viruses or malicious malware on it, and it is possible to achieve that goal. Although not all consumers are able to keep their computers free from malware and spyware, it is possible to take some precautions that will help you keep your PC safe and clean. This article will discuss a few of the ways you can stay safe on the web. Steps to secure your computer against malware It is safe to assume that anyone visiting this article is looking to keep their computer as clean as possible. While it might not be possible for any computer user to be totally safe from malware, there are some things that you can do to increase your chances of keeping your computer free from viruses and malicious malware. Of course, the first step is to turn off automatic updating. Even though it is possible to turn off your PC without a problem, updating should not be done automatically. There are already a lot of problems with people keeping their computers updated automatically, and it is best to avoid the situation. Another step to secure your computer is to make sure you are connected to a secure network. While it is possible for you to download and install viruses from the Internet, it
